

Assistant Professor of American Studies/United States History
Tenure-Track
Ref # FAC10-003
Feinstein College of Arts & Sciences

Review of applications will begin November 15, 2009 and will continue until the position is filled.

Description and Responsibilities:

The Department of History and American Studies invites applications for a tenure-track position in American Studies and/or United States social/cultural history. Primary responsibilities include teaching introductory and upper level courses in American Studies and United States history as well as sections of the University's interdisciplinary core history.

In general, all tenure-track RWU faculty must demonstrate effectiveness in the following four categories: 1) teaching; 2) academic advising and program development; 3) scholarly, professional and/or creative activities; and 4) institutional and/or community service.

Qualifications:

A Ph.D. by September, 2010, in American Studies or United States social and/or cultural history is required. Possible areas of specialization include transnational and/or global perspectives on American life and culture; American religious history and culture; and/or maritime history and culture.

Evidence of teaching excellence and experience with academic advising is highly desirable. Candidates must also present evidence of an on-going program of scholarly/creative activity.
