

Assistant Professor of Latin American History
Tenure-Track
Ref # FAC10-006
Feinstein College of Arts & Sciences

Review of applications will begin November 15, 2009 and will continue until the position is filled.

Description and Responsibilities:

The Department of History and American Studies invites applications for a tenure-track position in Latin American history with additional specializations in United States history and/or American Studies.

Primary responsibilities include teaching introductory and upper level courses on Latin American history and culture; courses on United States history and/or American Studies; and sections of the University's interdisciplinary core history.

In general, all tenure-track RWU faculty must demonstrate effectiveness in the following four categories: 1) teaching; 2) academic advising and program development; 3) scholarly, professional and/or creative activities; and 4) institutional and/or community service.

Qualifications:

A Ph.D. in Latin American history and evidence of teaching excellence is required. Ability to teach courses in United States history and/or American Studies and experience with curriculum development is highly desirable. Expertise in Atlantic history, world history, and/or religious studies is also desirable.

Candidates must also present evidence of an on-going program of scholarly/creative activity.
