

EDU 503 – Research in Learning and Development

This Educational Psychology course provides a study of the latest research related to the developmental concepts that influence teaching/learning processes. The focus of this course will include the areas of language, cognition, social/emotional development, and personality. Emphasis is also placed on concepts related to understanding and evaluating standardized tests, performance assessments, and other means of measurement. Field experiences in diverse settings are required.

(3 Credits)