

EDU 200 – Foundations of Education

The course is a prerequisite to the teacher education program designed for students to explore the profession and decide if they want to be teachers. The curriculum examines historical, philosophical, and social issues of teaching and learning through selected readings, class discussions, and student research. Field experiences are an integral component to this course. Students are required to write and present research on a current issue in education in addition to compiling a "culture of the school" report based on their field experiences.

(3 credits) Fall, Spring