WHAT IS CONSENT?

Consent is giving the permission for something to happen or an agreement to do something. Consent is something that should never be assumed even if you are in a committed relationship. As stated in Title Nine, in certain situations, a person does not have the capacity to agree to participate in consensual sex. Examples include individuals that are under the age of consent, intoxicated, developmentally disabled, mentally/physically unable to consent, etc. Anyone who is engaging in sexual contact with someone who is unable to give consent may be committing sexual assault.

What makes a healthy relationship?
We all have different definitions of what a healthy relationship is but there are a few important tips that can help you create your ideal version of a healthy relationship, where everyone involved is happy.

- Speak-Up. In a healthy relationship, if something is bothering you, it’s best to talk about it and communicate with your partner(s).

- Respecting Your Partner. Your partner’s wishes and feelings have value. Let your significant other know you are making an effort to keep their ideas in mind. Mutual respect is essential in maintaining healthy relationships.

- Compromise. Disagreements are a natural part of healthy relationships, but it’s important that you find a way to compromise if you disagree on something. Try to solve conflicts in a fair and rational way.

- Be Supportive. Offer reassurance and encouragement to your partner. Also, let your partner know when you need their support. Healthy relationships are about building each other up, not putting each other down.

Healthy Boundaries
Creating boundaries is a great way to keep your relationship healthy and secure. By setting boundaries together, you can both have a deeper understanding of the type of relationship that you and your partner want. Boundaries are not meant to make you feel trapped or like you’re “walking on eggshells.” Creating boundaries is not a sign of secrecy or distrust – it’s an expression of what makes you feel comfortable and what you would like or not like to happen within the relationship. Remember, healthy boundaries shouldn’t restrict your ability to:

- Go out with your friends without your partner.
- Participate in activities and hobbies you like.
- Not having to share passwords to your email, social media accounts or phone.
- Respect each other’s individual likes and needs.

Healthy Relationship Boosters
Even healthy relationships can use a boost now and then. You may need a boost if you feel disconnected from your partner or you feel like the relationship has become stale. If so, find a fun, simple activity you both enjoy, such as going on a walk, and talk about the reasons why you want to be in the relationship. Then, keep using healthy behaviors as you continue dating. If you’re single (and especially if you’re a single parent), remember relationships don’t just include your significant other and you. Think about all the great times you’ve had with your parents, siblings, friends, children or other family members.

What Isn’t a Healthy Relationship?
Relationships that are not healthy are based on power and control, not equality and respect. In the early stages of an abusive relationship, you may not think the unhealthy behaviors are a big deal. However, possessiveness, insults, jealous accusations, yelling, humiliation, pulling hair, pushing or other negative, abusive behaviors, are -- at their root -- exertions of power and control. Remember that abuse is always a choice and you deserve to be respected. There is no excuse for abuse of any kind. If you think your relationship is unhealthy, it’s important to think about your safety now. Consider these points as you move forward:

- Understand that a person can only change if they want to. You can’t force your partner to alter their behavior if they don’t believe they’re wrong.

- Focus on your own needs. Are you taking care of yourself? Your wellness is always important. Watch your stress levels, take time to be with friends, get enough sleep. If you find that your relationship is draining you, consider ending it.

- Connect with your support systems.

- Think about ending the relationship. Remember that you deserve to feel safe and accepted in your relationship.
